laundriroom — Partner Playbook

SLIDE 1 Partner Playbook

Welcome to laundriroom. This playbook walks your business through everything you need: setting up in your first week, running every order on the tablet, growing with your own page and promotions, getting paid, and keeping your standards high. Every screen you'll see is the real app. Managers should go through all of it; attendants mainly need Part 2.

SLIDE 2 The playbook in four parts

Four parts. Part 1 is the one-off setup — most of it is done once by the business's main manager in the first week. Part 2 is the everyday routine at the counter, and it's what attendants need most. Part 3 covers growing with your own page and promotions, and how and when you get paid. Part 4 covers reviews and quality, our golden rules, a simple daily routine, and how to get help.

SLIDE 3 Who does what

There are two kinds of login. The main manager — usually the owner — covers every branch and sees everything, including money: the Ledger, payouts and statements, plus Branches, Team and the payout account. Attendants work the counter: the queue, check-in, stages, handovers, walk-in orders and tags; they can request new item types but can't approve them, and they never see the business's money. If you have several shops, you can make someone a manager for one branch only; they run that branch's orders like an attendant and only see that branch. Riders — your own or a dispatch partner — don't need an account at all.

SLIDE 4 Eight steps to go live

Your first-week checklist, in order. The grey line under each step is where to find it in the menu. Steps 1 to 6 are for the main manager. Step 7 is for everyone: before real customers arrive, run one practice order from start to finish with your team — enter it at the counter, check items in with tags, move it through the stages and hand it over — so everyone has done it once. Then share your page link and QR code with your customers. The next slides go through each step.

SLIDE 5

Signing in

Everyone signs in on the laundriroom website with their own email and password and lands on the vendor dashboard. Forgot your password? Use “Forgot password” on the sign-in page, or ask your manager to send a login link from Team. The menu on the left is the same for everyone, except that the main manager also sees Team and Ledger. On a phone, the menu sits behind the Menu button at the top. Please never share one login between people — the app records who did each step under the person who is signed in.

SLIDE 6

Verify your business

Verification is in the menu. First, the main manager reads and accepts the Partner Agreement — the terms you work under on laundriroom. One clause to know well: customers who find you through laundriroom are served through the app for twelve months from their first order with you. If we update the agreement, you’ll be asked to accept the new version. Second, upload a government ID and your CAC certificate. Verification doesn’t stop you trading; once our team has checked them, the “Verified business” badge appears on your page and in the app, and customers trust it.

SLIDE 7

Branches and hours

Your business starts with one main branch. If you have more shops, the main manager adds each one under Branches, with its own address, phone and opening hours. All branches share one price list and one payout bank account, and your public page lists every branch so customers pick the nearest. Hours matter: when a branch is closed, customers can’t place drop-off or pickup orders with it. On a public holiday or a day you can’t open, tap Close for today, and Start taking orders when you’re back. Staff are placed at a branch from the Team page.

SLIDE 8

Adding your team

The main manager adds staff from Team. Enter their name and email, choose Attendant or Manager, and pick the branch they work at, then tap Send invite. laundriroom emails them an invitation from your laundry; they set their own password and sign in. Until they do, the team list shows “Invite sent” — use Resend invite if they can’t find the email. You can change someone’s role or branch at any time, send a login link if they forget their password, and remove anyone who leaves, which takes away their access straight away. Every person needs their own login — that’s how the app knows who checked in or handed over each order. Our team can also add staff for you if you need help.

SLIDE 9

Your payout account

Set this up before your first order, because payouts go nowhere without it. In Ledger, find Payout account and tap Change. Choose your bank, enter the account number and the account name exactly as it appears on the account. The name is checked with the bank, so a typo is caught before any money moves. Use the business's account — every branch is paid into this one account. Only the main manager can see or change it. If you ever change banks, update it here first.

SLIDE 10

Printing your tags

Every garment gets a tag at check-in, so print a stock before you start. The main manager opens Tags, enters how many to make — up to 500 at a time — and taps Generate. Each tag has a QR code and a short code made of your prefix and a number, like FPL-0042; the prefix is yours alone and numbers never repeat. Choose a size — 2.5 cm is the best all-rounder — then print on plain A4. Important: print at 100% or "Actual size", not "Fit to page", and check that the ruler at the bottom of the sheet measures 5 cm. Cut along the dashed lines and punch the small ring to attach the tag with a safety pin or tag gun. When an order is closed its tags are freed to use again.

SLIDE 11

Your order queue

The Queue is your home screen and where every day starts. It has three columns. New and incoming: orders customers have just placed — drop-offs on their way and pickups to collect; staff at that branch also get an email and WhatsApp alert for each one. In progress: orders being checked in or processed. Ready to hand over: finished orders waiting for collection or out with a rider. Tap any order to open it. If you have several branches and see all of them, use the branch buttons at the top to show one branch at a time.

SLIDE 12

Walk-in orders

Customers who walk in or phone you still go through the app. From the Queue, tap New order. Search for the customer by their full phone number or email; if they're new, add their name and phone — with an email, they'll get an invitation to set up their own account. Then choose the branch, how the clothes come in (at the counter or a pickup) and go back (collection or delivery), Standard or Premium, Normal or Express, and whether they pay online once priced or on delivery. Tap Create order & check items in and you go straight to checking items in. The customer gets an order confirmation by email and WhatsApp.

SLIDE 13

Collecting a pickup

For a pickup order, send your own rider or book a dispatch partner — riders don't need a laundriroom account. If you book a dispatch partner outside the app, you can log their booking reference on the order. At the door, the rider asks the customer for the 4-digit pickup PIN shown in their app, then phones it through or brings it back, and staff enter it on the order and tap Confirm pickup. Never take clothes without the PIN: it's your proof the collection happened, and it protects the customer. The activity log records who confirmed it.

SLIDE 14

Checking items in

Check in every garment, one at a time, in the order's Check in an item box. Attach a tag first, then tap Scan tag and point the tablet camera at the QR code — or type the code. Choose the item type and the service (wash and fold, dry clean, or press only); the price fills in from your price list, and the Add item button also shows what the customer pays. If you see a stain, a tear or wear, write a short condition note and, if you can, take a photo — it's optional, but it's your evidence if a customer later says the damage was yours. Tap Add item and move to the next garment. The customer sees each item, its tag and price in their app, and the full total before they pay. Each item records who checked it in.

SLIDE 15

Moving through stages

Once everything is checked in, the order moves through your processing stages. Each time the batch moves on, tap the stage on the tablet: Sorting, Washing, Drying, Pressing, Quality check, Packaging and finally Final completion. Tap them when they actually happen, not all at the end — your customer watches the order move in their app, and that saves you a lot of "is it ready?" calls. Stages go in order and skipping one needs a manager, which makes sure the quality check is never missed. Final completion marks the order ready for collection or delivery.

SLIDE 16

The handover

When an order is ready, it either waits for the customer to collect it or goes out for delivery. For delivery, enter the rider's name and phone — your own rider or a dispatch partner — and tap Send out for delivery; give the rider the order code. At the door, or at the counter for a collection, the customer shows their 4-digit handover PIN: enter it to close the order. If they chose pay on delivery, they tap Pay now in the app at the door instead — no cash and no code needed; the order closes once the payment comes through. If a delivery doesn't happen, use the buttons under "Delivery didn't happen?": "Customer unavailable" adds a small penalty to their bill, "Missing item / our error" adds none. The order goes back to ready for another attempt.

SLIDE 17

Who did what

At the bottom of every order is its Activity list: when the order was placed, who confirmed the pickup, who checked in each item, who pressed each stage, who sent it out and who handed it over — each with the time. There's no name to pick from a list; the app simply records whoever is signed in. That's why every person needs their own login, and why you should sign out on a shared tablet when someone else takes over. When a customer asks about an item, you can see straight away who handled it.

SLIDE 18

Lost or damaged tags

Tags fall off, get torn or go missing. Anyone on the team can deal with it in seconds. Open Tags and use Find a tag at the top: type the full code, or just its number — "42" finds FPL-0042 — or tap Scan and point the camera at it. Tap Missing or Damaged. To replace it, tap Reprint: the same code prints again and goes back into use, so it still matches the item it was on. If a missing tag turns up, tap Found it. The main manager can also reprint all of a batch's missing and damaged tags at once from the tag history.

SLIDE 19

New item types

Sometimes a customer brings something that isn't on your list — a kaftan, a graduation gown, a large rug. Anyone on the team can request it from Item requests: type the item's name and, if you can, a suggested price. The main manager sees it waiting and taps Approve or Reject. Once approved, the item joins your list and can be checked in like any other. Keep the request short and specific so the manager can price it quickly.

SLIDE 20

Your page and QR code

Your business has its own page on laundriroom, created automatically when you joined. It shows your name, branches and hours, your Verified badge, ratings and reviews, and your price list (shown with laundriroom's commission added — you're still paid your own price), with an Order button. From My page you can copy the link, send it to WhatsApp in one tap, and download a QR code to print for your counter, your receipts and your flyers. Customers who order through your link are your customers — the page shows how many orders and customers it has brought in. It's the easiest way to move regulars from phone calls and WhatsApp chats onto tracked, paid app orders.

SLIDE 21

Running promotions

The main manager can run your own promotions from Promos. Tap New promo, choose a code customers will type — FOLD10, JOSWEEKEND — and set the discount as a percentage (with an optional maximum) or a fixed naira amount. Add a usage limit, a per-customer limit and an expiry date if you want. Share the code on WhatsApp, your page or at the counter. Your own codes are funded by you: the discount comes out of your payout. Discounts laundriroom runs itself — our promos, referral rewards and the bulk discount for big orders — are paid by laundriroom, so you still get paid in full on those.

SLIDE 22

How you get paid

You never have to ask to be paid. As soon as an order is completed and paid — the handover PIN is confirmed, or a pay-on-delivery customer pays at the door — your payout is worked out and sent automatically to your payout bank account. Nothing comes off your prices: laundriroom's commission — one rate for every partner, [__%] at the moment — is added on top of your item prices for the customer. A ₦200 shirt at 30% shows the customer ₦260, and you receive ₦200. There's no commission on delivery, no subscription and no monthly fee. What you receive is your item prices, any premium extras and the delivery fee in full — less only your share of any promo code you chose to fund. The Express and Premium charges customers pay on top are worked out on your price and go to laundriroom, so your own prices are never cut. On an express order, the express charge replaces the commission rather than adding to it. In rare cases a payout waits: laundriroom can set a short hold window, and a payout on a disputed order waits until the dispute is settled.

SLIDE 23

Keeping your books

The Ledger is your bookkeeping, filled in from your orders automatically — and only the main manager can see it. At the top: income from paid orders, your expenses, the net, and the payout due (your own prices, in full), plus income split by branch. Use Add expense to record your costs — diesel for the generator, detergent, hangers and bags — and attach a photo of the receipt. The daily cash-up shows each day's income against expenses, and every payout is listed with its fee, the net paid and its status. Statement, Payouts and Transactions download as PDFs whenever your accountant or bank asks.

SLIDE 24

Reviews and quality

Customers rate each completed order from 1 to 5 stars, and good ratings show on your page and in the app — they're your best advertising. Reviews shows them all. When a customer gives 1 or 2 stars, you get an email and WhatsApp straight away: look into it, call or message the customer, and put it right quickly. If low ratings keep coming, laundriroom steps in, fairly and in the open: first we ask what happened, and you reply on the Reviews page; if it continues, a formal warning; and only if it still doesn't improve, suspension from the platform. These standards are what make customers trust every laundry on laundriroom — including yours.

SLIDE 25

Six golden rules

Six rules that keep you, your customers and laundriroom safe. Tag every item — no tag, no check-in. Always use the PIN — no clothes are collected or handed over without the customer's 4-digit PIN. Record damage — a condition note and a photo at check-in are your evidence. Everyone uses their own login — never share passwords, because the app records who did each step. Keep your hours true — use Close for today when you're shut, so customers aren't left waiting. And keep it in the app: under the Partner Agreement, customers who found you through laundriroom are served through the app for twelve months from their first order with you — no side deals, cash payments or direct bookings for them.

A day at the counter

A simple routine that keeps everything running. When you open, make sure your branch shows as open and look through New and incoming. Every drop-off: tag and check in each item, noting any damage. Through the day, tap each stage when it really happens and send ready orders out with a rider. At every handover, confirm the PIN — or, for pay on delivery, let the customer pay in the app. At closing, check what's waiting under Ready to hand over and sign out of the shared tablet. Once a week the main manager reads the reviews, checks there are enough printed tags, logs the week's expenses and looks over the Ledger.

SLIDE 27

Welcome to the team.

That's the playbook. To recap: set up once in your first week, run every order the same way on the tablet, share your page and let payouts arrive automatically, and keep your standards high. You're never on your own — message partner support on WhatsApp or by email whenever you need help. Our team can also set things up on your behalf: adding staff, adding branches or printing tags. Welcome to laundriroom.
